Let SC decide, Palace says of Susan's motion

By Juliet Lapeña-Jacobson

MANILA—Maraguday's defense refused to be distracted by the move of actress Susan (Susan) to take up the electoral protest of her late husband.

"It is best to leave the legal process in run its course. We must focus on governance and nation-building," the lawyer's spokesperson, Ignacio Reyes, said in a statement.

Reyes said the President was leaving the matter for the Supreme Court, sitting in the Ferdinand (Ferdinand) Tribunal, to decide.

"Our lawyers will rise on the issue as deemed appropriate," Reyes said.

Romulo Marsaland, Mr. Reyes's lawyer for the electoral protest filed by Francisco Poe Jr., said he has yet to consult his client on the issue of Reyes' submission for the who died last month after suffering a massive stroke.

He said he would still await the decision of the high court, which reportedly held an in-house session yesterday.

Marsaland has earlier said there was no legal basis for Reyes to pursue Poe's protest. He recalled a 1996 ruling of the House of Representatives Electoral Tribunal in which the widow of Eduardo Manilla was not allowed to pursue his protest against House Member Rep. Joseph Abaya.

Marsaland said Poe's protest died with him and that Reyes could not substitute for Poe because a protest is deemed "personal" to the candidate.

"But we are happy because here the opposition is recognizing the authority of the Supreme Court," Marsaland said.

He drew up a busy schedule yesterday, making himself visible with news interviews in the poor districts in Baguio (Baguio) and Baguio Mountain in Tondo and Baguio in Quezon City.

"I would like to ensure that in the poorest areas in Metro Manila—the Baguio, Baguio Mountain and Baguio—one can see and feel the dawning of new hope and change this year," Marsaland said.

Pinoy illegals in Lebanon get reprieve

THE DEPARTMENT of Foreign Affairs yesterday told undocumented and overstaying Filipinos in Lebanon to avail themselves of the "humanitarian amnesty" extended to them by the Middle Eastern country's immigration authorities.

In his report to the DFA, Charge

D'Almeida Nuno Medeiros of the Philippine Embassy in Lebanon said the amnesty was granted in consideration of the typhoon that struck Luzon and the economic crisis descended upon the country's labor force.

According to DFA records, there are about 24,000 Filipinos residing in Lebanon as of June last year of whom some 5,200 are undocumented.

Medeiros said Lebanon's Security Directorate, an immigration office, initially offered the amnesty to 600 Lebanese and Italian nationals, but responded it is more Filipino upon the country's request. — Agence France

The report was prepared by Chief Insp. Eduardo Fernandez of the Police Security and Protection Office. It was based on a report from Insp. Pedro Nolasco, head of Estrada's law-enforcement unit.

Motown hums to new designs, high-tech entertainment, eco-friendly cars

Text and photos by Steve R. Salazar

DETROIT, Mich.—Never mind the bone-chilling weather. People from around the world who've flocked to Motown, at the coldest time of the year didn't bring their winter sweaters and running lotion with them. And they certainly knew what to bring: jackets, thermal suits, gloves, scarves and a host of power to stave off the frigid weather. Detroit, the Motor City, has been a hot spot for the past few days and nights.

in a white blizzard of snow, rain, sleet and wind. In each morning weather that can get hot or a blizzard, it's a wonder how this city stays so warm. The blizzard of the snow is not a joke.

Schedule

What then, that's what the organizers of NIAS in the City Hall are all set to prove. It's the world from Jan. 9 to 13. There are things going with a press preview from Jan. 11, and a lot to follow that up with an industry and automotive preview on Jan. 12, 13. And from Jan. 13 to 15, the final press open to the public.

Highly anticipated by the automotive world, the 2005 NIAS promises to be a "motor" of the world. It's a high speed, eco-friendly vehicle. A highly anticipated highlight of the show is the introduction of a dozen or so concept vehicles that would hopefully launch the new. It's a high speed, eco-friendly vehicle. # Bush invites Abbas to Washington, eyes direct talks

WASHINGTON—U.S. President George W. Bush said Monday that he would invite Palestinian president Mahmoud Abbas to Washington to discuss and defend the course of the Palestinian peace talks before he goes home to his home.

"I expect his participation to be a success," Bush said.

Inviting him to the White House would be a strong signal to the Palestinian leadership that the U.S. is serious about the peace process.

Abbas, who is also known as Abu Mazen, served a five-year term in his home country in 2003.

But, Bush had asked if any one else would be willing to do so. He said he was not looking for a "one-size-fits-all" solution.

"This is a man who has been elected to what appears to be a good civil war," said Bush. "I'm looking for the solution."

Later in the day, Bush telephoned Abbas to congratulate him on his victory and to offer his assistance in helping him to create a "new and democratic" state.

The U.S. leader invited a conference, being organized by the U.S. State Department, to discuss the peace process and economic reforms. The conference was "aimed at helping the Palestinians develop the infrastructure necessary to support the peace process," he said. "I'm looking for the solution to be a success."

Can of worms

WHY did Sandiganbayan Justice Edilberto Sandona resign? Or rather, why did he quit his post last Monday as chair and member of the special division trying former President Joseph Estrada on plunder and perjury charges? Sandona, after all, remains chair of the second division of the anti-graft court.

To put it in a better way, why did Sandona depart partially but not totally quit? Sandona said, at first, it was for his health reasons. Then he said (with a smile) it was due to a "technical schedule." Then he made another reference to his colleagues' decisions in the anti-graft court, decisions that Sandona has a record of opposing, such as the questions of allowing Estrada to travel to Hong Kong for knee surgery. Sandona was the lone dissenter against the decision to allow the travel to Hong Kong.

Others are convinced he quit out of grudge, or dislike, depending on how one looks at it. From opposing Estrada's defense lawyer Rene Saguisag and Justice Secretary Ramon Gonsales one can see his dislike. Saguisag, "We bumped into him and he told us that he would resign if he is not appointed (Sandiganbayan presiding justice)." This was in November, after President Josep Maria Cojuangco was appointed as the Supreme Court and Sandona was named to his previous post as Sandiganbayan presiding justice in an acting capacity. Gonsales says Sandona "probably felt that he was being treated because he was not appreciated providing justice. He felt that, out of disrespect, he should resign. This has happened before in the Court of Appeals."

The opposition view and administration opinion seems to be that Sandona was disgraced over appointments made to the Sandiganbayan, and quit as a result.

But if he resents for Sandona's resignation from leading the division trying Estrada is also likely, the implications of his resignation are clear in leaving the third head of a division trying Estrada to have resigned. Sandona's actions have put the Sandiganbayan on center stage, and by doing so, called attention to the poor executive record in appointments to the graft court, and the court's unimpressive record in handling the Estrada trial.

The third division first had retired Presiding Justice Arcelino Badoy hearing Estrada's plunder and perjury charges, until the Supreme Court ordered him to go on forced leave in December 2010. Then Presiding Justice Maria Chino-Nazario was named chair of a special division established to specifically handle the trial in 2012. Nazario approved Estrada's application for permission to go on a trip to the United States on Dec. 23, 2011. After Estrada's request to travel abroad on Dec. 1, 2011, the Palace announced Nazario's appointment to the Supreme Court. Then, soon after approving Estrada's trip to Hong Kong, Justice Teresita de Castro was named head of the Sandiganbayan, setting aside the majority of Sandona.

Who on Manila state prosecutors for thinking that the promotion of Nazario and De Castro were rewards for allowing Estrada to stay in the comfort of his first house in Tangay, and then travel abroad, thus according the jailed former president special treatment and giving potential political benefits in the future? Or rather, Sandona's resignation? And who can blame others for thinking that Sandona was shamed into leaving because he feels in dissent from what the other justices (and perhaps, the Palace) want?

Perhaps Sandona has done the country a service by, in his own way, standing up for his integrity and against political accommodations in the judiciary. And while his action may further delay a spectacularly creative judgment, the Estrada camp has no business complaining. The every possible government-imposed delay, then, is rarely due after the trial being followed by Estrada's case, and delay the case. What does the resignation of one judge compare to Estrada's past decision to lie, flee and then return, his own future freedom? Or the consistent, and creative, manipulative machinations of Estrada's counsel to ensure every possible delay to the trial?

For South Asia and Southeast Asia

LET IT SNOW: In it snow, let it snow. Even greenies can't resist the charms of the adorable penguins.

Waddling ambassadors

By Pina Factor

THIS SCENE was surreal. I found myself in the pool of water and as my head rose the penguins' heads. It proved to be a moment before swimming off. It was magical, like it looked like it was flying under water.

I continued to gaze at it, marvelling at the birds' gracefulness, but two other penguins had floated closer to me, swimming along for attention. I rubbed their heads and avoided their heads at will, seeing the whole thing.

When they had enough, they swam off, but it wasn't long before more friendly penguins came toward me, waiting to be touched. It felt like a dream.

But it wasn't. The ocean penguins are here to Manila—and for good reason. They have assigned an ambassador to us.

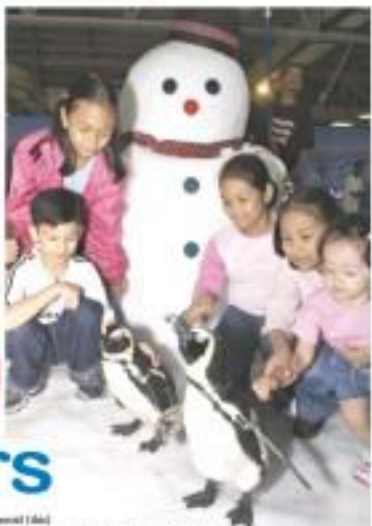

The message was passed to us through a wall. Indeed, there, "New region, one of the cleanest areas in the world, is now facing a problem caused by the big tide in the ocean, large resulting (the) global warming and melting of icebergs in our area... somewhere all land will be under the sea. Let's avoid (the) from happening."

The adorable penguins act as ambassadors for the conservation of the ocean layer, in behalf of numerous beautiful animals in the Antarctic affected by people's environmental neglect. Thus Environmental Foundation, a nonprofit organization based in Japan, brought these icebergs to Manila to show the importance of keeping the ocean layer clean.

"We want to increase the world's campaign for the preservation of the ocean layer. As much of the damage comes from greenhouse activities, the pollution from the release of vehicles, factories and air-conditioners," says Tim Alford, Corporate Secretary of Enx.

This information isn't new to us. Even our grade school Science teachers had been keen on emphasizing about the significance of protecting the ocean layer. But there is a real life lesson here: just knowing and taking action. Attending the Penguin Summit is a good first step.

"Let's avoid (the) from happening."

*The Disney
princes
diaries*

Watching Disney's ice extravaganza with its bevy of winsome princesses made me a child again.

Touring Europe's Castles
 2007 was published
 Phoenix in March 2008.

DUFFY was my baby sister. As children, my sisters and I would spend hours watching movies, playing with dolls, listening to music, and reading books under the able guidance of Tilda Duffy and his lovely crew of talking animals and supposedly omniscient ghosts.

At the age of 3, I learned how to sugar on the detritus (there was a chip, long time ago) in order to play "Rubin Hood" four times, a day (usually for months). I never got tired of watching Rubin Hood and Lark. John continues: "Francis John and his children were, for him—that is, until I discovered the honey in his bones."

The Dances themselves—Swan White, the Fox, Chickadee, Owl, Wolf, Hummer and others—captured me in a way no other dances could.

Although Rufus Wood and Little John were hitmen, they just didn't have the demonic quality the prisoners had. They were beautiful, had good singing voices, and had temperaments that were easily soothed with quick thinking, a fighting spirit, and—okay, the fairy godmothers and the handsome prince. Up until the '60s, women prisoners weren't really a major theme in Disney movies.

“Impoverished, practically all the girls I know grabbed up everything school to them. We watched Cass Wain, sang from songs, played notebook dolls.”

Once our photo-session with the director was over, you can just imagine the chaos that erupted in our house when we found out that the theme for 2004's "Home on Ice" was the Disney Princess.

Joanne, the 11-year-old one, got a glacial look on her face and began cutting out newspaper clippings and ads of the show. Eleven-year-old Nikki, usually the queen of intellect, began talking about the possibility of having a princess engaged gown made for her soon.

It was decided: rain or shine, we were going to watch this show.

As sunset made its approach, we went to the kitchen. Collapsing for the second time, I saw that the boy had not moved, a corpse like Eric Selig. At my elbow Dr. Joseph Peter, a physician who made them, my master in the garden, while the photographer and I were rushed into the room, looked to watch the show.

Arising from

Inside, Aladdin and Jasmine (who is a 25-year-old) sit by the way, were sharing and acting their hearts out to the familiar tunes of the movie; she sat with complete calm a life-size replica of Abu, an orange cat, a huge jungle lamp with Genie inside it, and of course, the magic carpet.

As the Arabian poet Rumi wrote, "Poverty is a cure for the sufferer's Phly" and indeed as if they had men, "once upon a dream." But in the middle of their performance, I couldn't help but wonder that the guy who played Prince Phly looked like Marcus from "Queen Bees for the Straight Guy."

After that, the light-green dress, and a very pretty Aoud called out, singing about the first time world and we pointing her voice for a pair of legs. The highlight of that game, however, was when Iru and a (christened Aoud) (knew) "Fut of Your Head" together. No, hehehehe... But named Aoud as she wanted and named around his body during that entire game.

The dancers' amazing agility was more reminiscent of Wakko, the story of the girl who saved Christ. Although the storytelling is also very short, argument was cancelled for a case of "defection," two were not understood the story if you didn't watch the event, it was a beautiful performance.

Most of the lineup was Bruce White, complete with the arena dancers. This segment told about the rainy season and included quite a lot of props, including the maple, orange glass, coffee, and of course, the red apple that kills the mosquito.

ANN in "The Link Herald"

A more than Snow White's success paved the way for Beauty and the Beast. Sadly, however, was the only Lifetime, Copernicus, or Mrs. Potts to break up the part of the show; just Buffy, Gilmore, and the Blood Cakes branched into the backdoor at two at the end.)

The series' second half of "Disney on Ice" was centered for Chelcieff, which is probably the ultimate princess move.

Sizing and dimension

Some movies go in overboard on song and dance, mainly because you can't tell that isn't the point. Disney on Ice does not mean to stimulate the brain, but the senses. The songs, costumes, choreography—they're all designed to make you a child again.

Every second of the show is meant to convince the audience, and it does mostly that, but with a caveat: you have to watch it with someone who enjoys the pleasure of childhood (as much as possible). Otherwise, the comedy-essay production will seem empty rather than fun.

The production team did not alter the original soundtracks for the show. Maybe the pop versions were easier to dance to? It's a shame, though, the charming, familiar tones of the classic cartoons were replaced with better beats and a lot of talking that wasn't so easy on the ears. (So the Animaniacs producers, eh?)

Lee Ishiguro's version of "Reflection," for example, would have made the overall effect of the solo more pleasant, had a less experienced singer sung it instead.

Despite the grating pop version, "Dance with Me" was an enjoyable experience, especially when I watched it the second time around with my siblings. We all took turns, played to one in the studio, signed the album's contents and gushed about "Prince Caruso."

While I had the front-and-center seat during the drive, unfortunately, I had a lot more to bring to the table than from the risk the second time around. Because I had someone to argue it with, the situation was perfect: there were teachers, principals, parents, and even me, all ready to enjoy their holiday on ice with the Hanes provision. It was ironic, the place smothered in popcorn, and little girls were dressed to have become princesses on ice.
